ECONOMY & HUMAN CAPITAL

- ② Human Capital Formation is considered as a good indicator for economic growth and development.
- ③ Prior to the nineteenth century, systematic investment in human capital was not important in any country. Expenditures on schooling, on-the-job training, and other forms of investment were quite small. This began to change radically during that century with the application of science to the development of new goods and more efficient methods of production, first in Great Britain, and then gradually spreading to other countries.

What is Capital Formation?

TYPES OF CAPITAL FORMATION

Human capital	Human development
i. Human capital is a human resource	i. Human development is a process
ii. It states education	ii. It states that education and health are important to attain well-being
iii. It states that education and health are important to attain well-being because only when people have the ability to read and write, they have quality to make healthy life	iii. It states that education and health are important to attain well-being because only when people have the ability to read and write, they have quality to make healthy life
iv. It considers that investment in education and health is important, if it does not increase the output of goods and services	iv. It considers that human welfare should be increased through investment in education and health if such investments do not result in higher labor productivity

Thank you very much for your cooperation. Workers, natural resources, materials, etc., thus liberated, are put at disposal for the production of capital goods. Countries with high household savings rates can accumulate funds to produce faster capital goods, and a government with a surplus can invest the surplus in capital goods. In other words, capital formation involves the manufacture of more capital goods, such as machines, tools, factories, transport equipment, materials, electricity, etc., that are used for the future production of goods. Capital formation process: To accumulate capital goods it is necessary to sacrifice part of current consumption. b) Mobilization of savings: A financing and credit mechanism, so that the available resources are obtained by private or government investors for the formation of capital. By issuing more notes and exchanging them with productive resources, the government can build real capital. c) Investment of savings: The act of investment itself so that the resources are actually used for the production of capital goods. The greater the degree to which people are willing to abstain from current consumption, the greater the degree to which society devotes resources to the new formation of capital. They then use these undistributed profits for investment in real capital. People save to be able to provide for old age and unforeseen emergencies. If society consumes everything it produces and does not save anything, the future productive capacity of the economy will fall as the present capital equipment wears down. In addition, savings can be made not only by households but also by businesses and the government. The term refers to additions of capital goods such as equipment, tools, transport assets and electricity. The aim is to mobilize these productive and unproductive workers in various capital³ projects, such as roads, canals, school construction³ health centers and food combinations, where they do not require much more capital to work in. Capital formation³ to increase the stock of capital goods in a country. Voluntary savings are those savings that people make of their own will. Foreign capital can take the form of: (a) Direct private investments, (b) grants and grants from foreign governments, (c) grants from international agencies, (d) World Bank. Countries can obtain capital to relate older ones that are no longer needed to younger ones. If more households are being saved, the country can report a cash surplus, which is a positive sign of capital formation. The level of savings in a country depends on the power to save and its progress to save. Fluctuations in investment³ are primarily due to changes in expectations with respect to earnings. The power to save or save an economy's capacity depends mainly on the average level of income and the distribution³ national income. Finances by deficit means the creation³ new money. Various personal, family and national considerations induce people to save. A well-developed capital market ensures that society's savings are mobilized and transferred to the savings accounts of entrepreneurs who require them. To achieve some of the current consumption and expect more consumption in the future, they require frequent³ by people. Disguised unemployment. Another source of capital formation is to mobilize the savings potential that exists in the form of disguised unemployment. The higher the amount of taxes collected and benefits made, the greater the government's saving. The World Bank measures capital by evaluating the change in net savings. The inventory includes raw materials and merchandise available for sale. The term "asset produced" means that only those assets that into existence as a result of a production process are included. If the household savings rate is increasing, savers may invest the additional dollars and purchase stocks and bonds. Foreign Capital: Capital formation in a country can also take place with the help of foreign capital, i.e., foreign savings. In this case, the investment of savings should take place, there must be a good number of honest and dynamic entrepreneurs in the country who are able to take risks and bear uncertainty of production. If the rate of capital formation is to be stepped up, the development of capital market is very necessary. But it is the size of the market which provides scope for profitable investment. Mobilization of Savings: The next step in the process of capital formation is that the savings of the households must be mobilized and transferred to businessmen or entrepreneurs who require them for investment. Savings must be invested in order to have capital goods. But it is the two determinants of inducement to invest—the marginal efficiency of capital and the rate of interest. AAIat is the former which is of greater importance. Inducement to invest depends on the marginal efficiency of capital (i.e., the prospective rate of profit) on the one hand and the rate of interest, on the other. Thus, capital formation takes place not only in the private sector by individual entrepreneurs but also in the public sector by government. In other words, if whole of the current productive activity is used to produce consumer goods and no new capital goods are made, production of consumer goods in the future will greatly decline. The higher the level of income, the greater will be the amount of savings. Moreover, people want to make provision for education, marriage and to give a good start in business for their children. Marginal efficiency of capital depends upon the cost or supply prices of capital as well as the expectations of profits.
